Scouting Report from 2010 Baltimore Showcase:

Griffin is diminutive in height, but built like a defensive back. Incredibly broad shoulders. He possesses simple shooting mechanics with terrific balance on his shot. Manages to square himself to the rim on off-balance attempts. He's effective from long distance, but absolute money from the mid-range. He hit countless baseline jumpers from 17-18 feet during the showcase, with net splashing regularity. Projects an aura of quiet confidence on the floor. A natural leader, but not a natural lead guard. Not explosive off the bounce, and was unable to shake free from his defender in condensed areas. On ball pressure gave him problems. Didn't create easy opportunities for his mates and passing skills were not on display. Showed solid lateral quickness on the perimeter, and battled defensively when stuck in a mismatch situation. There's no questioning his toughness or knack for putting the ball in the basket, but size constraints at the 2 are obvious.

He reminds Adam of: Earl Boykins (with muscle)
