Powerfully built guard in the full back mold. Is he a natural 1 or 2? Couldn't create separation off the dribble due to lack of elite foot speed/quickness. He didn't appear overly secure with his dribble either, anxious to get rid of the ball when pressured. Drilled an 18-foot jumper off an inbounds play, displaying a quick trigger on the catch and shoot. Seems better served coming off screens, allowing him to get momentum into the shot. He had a pair of open spot up opportunities, but could not connect. Definitely capable of lending a hand on the boards and taking up space. It would have been nice to see King take advantage of his strength inside and abuse weaker guards. He likely didn't get an opportunity to showcase his full repertoire at the event, but a sense of urgency and desire to leave an imprint was not apparent. It should be noted that he played on a team with a trigger happy point guard.

He reminds Adam of:

Willie Green (New Orleans Hornets)
