Solid, cut frame with good size and length for the point guard position. He displayed notable playmaking skills when looking to attack, compressing the defense and creating openings for others. Good quickness and ability to breakdown a single defender one-on-one. Capable of getting all the way to the bucket and finishing through a bump. Failed to hit rim on his first three long range jumpers, clearly rushing his shot and not squaring to the hoop. Pulled up at the top of the key from 25 feet on his fourth attempt and drained it. Prefers to take a few lefty habit dribbles before going up. He also converted a pull-up J just inside the three-point line, exhibiting significant elevation. Hyman was active on both backboards, a result of his leaping ability and length. While he made some nice looks in transition, there were a few too many nervous habit passes mixed in. He has the canvas to be a solid on-ball defender with his agility and lateral quickness. The touch isn't there, needs to loosen up on his shot.

He reminds Adam of:

Marcus Banks (New Orleans Hornets)
