J.R. Inman Scouting Report

Written by: Adam Ganeles (Talent Scout, NBADraft.net)

Name:	J.R. Inman (#95)
Position:	Forward
Height:	206 cm (6'9)
College:	Rutgers
Professional Experience:	Lithuania-LKL, NBA D-League

Inman is a skilled 6'9 power forward with a versatile offensive repertoire. He was highly aggressive in the paint, showing an array of quick, powerful post moves. Nimble footwork has always been a strength, keeping his pivot foot and utilizing drop steps. Remained for the most part under control despite assertive intentions. Inman has certainly matured physically since his time in the Big East. His upper body has filled out substantially allowing him to shield defenders and not rely on length/finesse. He uses his lower body effectively to establish early post position and demand the rock. A definitive effort was made to showcase his face up game and advanced ballhandling skills. There's no doubt he poses a mismatch for opposing power forwards when he turns to face in the high post. He looked comfortable elevating for a mid-range jumper off the dribble as well. However, his jumpshot release is a bit flat with a tendency to guide the ball at the rim. Inman possesses high level agility for a man his size, getting up and down the floor easily. He was routinely the first man to cross half court. Strides are a bit small, but foot speed is apparent. His hustle was a welcome sight, diving on the floor for loose balls, ballhawking passing lanes and playing with a constant motor. Snatched all rebounds within his general area. Lateral quickness is solid, maintaining good balance. His wingspan is extremely formidable. While not an above the rim shot blocker, meager attempts will be sent back. A solid but not overwhelming athlete. He seems to have lost some explosion with the additional bulk.

He reminds Adam of:

D.J. White (Charlotte Bobcats)
