Long range gunner plays with an air of confidence. Standing at 5'11, McNair looks like a natural two, but was forced to occupy the one spot and did so admirably. Kept his head up at all times, showing flashes of excellent court vision spotting teammates under the hoop for easy looks. Didn't make an effort to create much off the bounce, but he got the team into offensive sets. He made his hay from downtown, shooting without hesitation. When afforded the luxury to spot up and square his body to the rim, he was extremely efficient. However, he showed a tendency to fade away and abort the follow through on rushed attempts. At his size, he needs time and space to setup. He used his strong frame to his advantage defensively, staying low in his stance and preventing his man from getting a step. McNair was feisty on the glass, unafraid to mix it up and throw his "weight" around.

He reminds Adam of:

Jason Terry (Dallas Mavericks)
